SILVET

November 12th, 2025

Over the last forty-two years of my exclusively equine practice, I have tried many topical wound treatments. Until recently, I haven't really seen one that has produced the results that we are seeing with a relatively new (to the US market) solution called Silvet.
Silvet has had widespread success in Israel, and I believe it will be a game changer here in the US as well.
I have had the opportunity to use Silvet as a wound lavage on fresh wounds as well as some severe necrotic, infected wounds that were not addressed initially. I was amazed at the rapid healing, reduction of inflammation and overall results produced with only the topical administration of Silvet solution. Silvet can be used before or after suturing. I am planning on using Silvet for many other applications as it destroys the biofilm which is the key to fighting infections. Clients can also lavage and rebandage with Silvet twice a day as recommended.
I believe that other veterinarians will experience the same results. I find this product to be very beneficial in my everyday practice and will help with client satisfaction with its excellent results.
